“ To me, she was Lil' Terri'...her license plate was custom, reading 'FUNYGRL'. She took singing lessons, played pool and roller skated around Golden Gate Park when roller skating around Golden Gate Park was the thing to do. Beautiful, truly...her hair and make up were the envy of all. Some would say she was shy, yet I witnessed her 'shine' in numerous situations, laughing along with those she made laugh. Tuna sandwiches with black olives were her favorite and she was trusted by her employers, moving up ladders quickly. She cared and continued to, even if it wasn't reciprocal. Smart, quick witted, she dressed for success. There were three of us back then, friends, lacking life skills, discipline and the sense to be sensible. We worked hard, played hard and took advantage of every opportunity to be together, so that we wouldn't have to be alone. Long after our lives got in the way of our friendship, I knew she knew I loved her. Upon being given the news of her passing, I had one question, just one. Was she happy? She was....
